

Why Your Buddies Died

Statisticians here at the Safety Center constantly analyze the reports you submit about mishaps. Then, they send the results of that analysis to the rest of the Safety Center staff. That information tells the analysts and program managers where the problem areas are in the Navy and Marine Corps and where they need to concentrate their efforts.

While this data is normally for planning, this last bit of information our number wizards released is as much for your use as ours. These three charts show what caused the deaths of 1,846 of you during the last five years.

Find the chart that pertains to you and study it. See what activities are most likely to get you and your peers killed. You don't need to let down your guard in doing things where the numbers are low; just be particularly cautious when engaging in those activities with the high kills. ☒
